

KEATING SOON BACK TO JAIL

Alleged Wife-Beater, Freed on Bail, Goes on Another
Rampage.

RAISED A RACKET AT ACCUSER'S HOME

Shipfitter James Keating it seems will court trouble. Yesterday Saloonkeeper Jacob Kline, of Second and Line streets, was kind enough to get him out of jail on $300, in which amount he was held on Tuesday for assault and battery on his wife at her home, 208 Chestnut street.

Just as soon as he got out, Keating started to liquor up and last night he repaired to 208 Chestnut street with the evident intention of revenging himself on his wife for having him arrested, but he raised such a rampage and racket that M. Makarow, the landlord of the furnished room house, had Policeman Harry Mines lock him up for drunkenness and disorderly conduct.

Keating claimed that when he went to the house yesterday to get his things his wife bolted the door against him and wouldn't let him in the room.

Recorder Stackhouse sentenced the trouble-hunter to twenty days in the Sheriff's unfurnished apartments at Sixth and Market streets, and to add to his woe Saloonkeeper Kline threw up his ball.
